9th edition 2017

These weeks, one highlight is followed by the next: the 2nd Congress of joint European Neonatal Societies (jENS) took place in Venice, Italy. Almost 2,000 participants gathered together for listening to new findings and exchanging views. As part of the organising institutions, we had the honour to hold several courses and a plenary session. Now, World Prematurity Day on 17 November is knocking at the door. We are more than happy to continue our large-scale initiative A Strong Start for Little Heroes with 170 participating hospitals in Germany, Austria, and Switzerland. We wish all of you who plan events and campaigns a successful World Prematurity Day.

Venice, la Serenissima, hosted this year's jENS Congress

The 2nd Congress of joint European Neonatal Societies in Venice, Italy, is over. Five days of remarkable sessions, impressive talks and lively discussions lie behind the almost 2,000 participants from about 85 countries. As part of the organising societies and executive committee, EFCNI had the honour to organise and chair a pre-course, several parallel and one plenary session. In addition, EFCNI interviewed the presidents of the different societies and the scientific committee about the congress and its unique features.

Let them thrive! World Prematurity Day 2017

On 17 November, we will once more unite for World Prematurity Day. We warmly invite you to share this year's global theme "Let them thrive!" We will highlight the value of respectful care for preterm babies and their families provided by healthcare professionals and thank them for their work. Respectful care encompasses mothers, babies, and families as a unit, from pre-pregnancy through labour, delivery, as well as treatment and care of the child. Please find more information on our website and send us a summary of your events by 3 December via this survey.

Involvement of parents in research projects

For a meaningful and ethical interaction, the involvement of parents in research projects should be guided by values and principles. In order to setup a beneficial partnership of both parties, parents and researchers, the position paper Involvement of parent representatives in neonatal research was developed by EFCNI in close collaboration with parent representatives.

EFCNI welcomes new team members

We are more than happy to introduce two new team members: Philine Jaeger and Paloma Celeste Baldoceda Manrique de Lara joined EFCNI in October 2017. While Philine supports the scientific department as Project Manager for Maternal and Newborn Health, Paloma strengthens the corporate management & administration department as Financial Officer. We wish Paloma and Philine a good start at EFCNI!

New ESPR President: Professor Charles Christoph Roehr

This year's jENS congress in Venice also marked a change in the Council of the European Society for Paediatric Research (ESPR): Professor Luc Zimmermann handed over the Presidency to his successor Professor Charles Christoph Roehr. On this occasion, we would like to sincerely thank Professor Luc Zimmermann for his continuous commitment and strong support during the past years and we wish Professor Charles Christoph Roehr all the best for his new role. We furthermore look very much forward to our collaboration and many important common projects ahead.

Accelerating social entrepreneurship

The RuhrSummit on 19 October in Dortmund, Germany, was an innovative conference that brought together startups and investors with special guests like the comedian and physician Dr Eckart von Hirschhausen. One part of the conference was the ImpactSummit, a match making event for social entrepreneurs. EFCNI Chair and Ashoka Fellow Silke Mader, represented EFCNI in the panel and workshop "ChangeMaker Company". We feel honoured that the cooperation between Philips Avent and EFCNI was presented as a best-practice example for the "co-creation" between social entrepreneurs and companies.

App for siblings of preterms

The German Federal Association "Das frühgeborene Kind" e. V. recently launched the app "Hallo Frühchen" (hello preemie) addressed to siblings of preterm babies. "Hallo Frühchen" tells the story of Amelie, a young girl attending kindergarten, whose brother is born preterm. Amelie is accompanied by her stuffed tiger Tassilo. Realised in comic-style, Tassilo the tiger explains the complexity of preterm birth in a language to suit children.

Books for good: fundraising campaign by Neišnešiotukas

Our Lithuanian partner organisation Neišnešiotukas won the support of the biggest book stores of the chain "Pegasas". In a two months fundraising campaign, the stores around the country donated a part of the revenues of their book sales to Neišnešiotukas. The money will be used for vital hospital inventory and for music therapy education in Lithuanian NICUs.

Happy Birthday Harl.e.kin

On the occasion of the tenth anniversary of Harl.e.kin in Kaufbeuren, Germany, EFCNI's Vice Chair Nicole Thiele complimented representatives of the programme for their valuable commitment. Har.le.kin is a very low-threshold programme that supports families with preterm babies in transition between hospital and home. Its major aim is to strengthen the parents' competence to care for the child at home. We wish the Harle.kin team all the best for the next ten years!

11 months - 11 topics: Patient safety and hygiene practice

The year keeps proceeding and so does the EFCNI calendar. In October, all eyes were focused on Patient safety and hygiene practice. Hygiene plays a crucial part in the wellbeing and healthy development of preterm infants. Their immune system is operating at full stretch and additional external challenges like germs and bacteria can weaken it at all hazards with lethal consequences. In line with our monthly topic one can learn about risks and measures to improve hygiene and patient safety.

The less invasive surfactant application (LISA) in preterm infants

Infants born without enough surfactant may develop a condition called respiratory distress syndrome (RDS). RDS occurs in preterm infants due to the immaturity of their lungs and the inability to make sufficient surfactant. On the occasion of our topic of the month October Patient safety and hygiene practice, we spoke with the neonatologist Dr Angela Kribs, who together with further experts investigated a less invasive surfactant application protocol (LISA) in extremely preterm infants.

Research on preventing wrong-patient orders in the NICU

The failure to correctly identify a patient in the hospital or other health-care environments can occur under multiple circumstances. Infants in the Neonatal Intensive Care Unit (NICU) are at particularly high risk for wrong-patient errors. Researchers from New York and Ohio conducted a quality improvement study to learn more about the frequency and risk factors of wrong-patient-errors in the NICU and to assess the effectiveness of different interventions for preventing these errors.
